

CAMBRIA

As a tribute to the settlers of the Black Hills, Cambria is named after a town that exists in name and memory only.

The town of Cambria, founded in 1889, was a mining community 8 miles north of Newcastle, Wyoming. It provided coal for the western expansion of the railroads. With a population of about 1400, Cambria had many amenities of a larger town, including an Opera House.

There was a period though when the mining company placed a prohibition on all alcohol stronger than beer. Saloons and dance halls were banned, fatal brawls were not uncommon. However, a beer wagon arrived daily from Newcastle to satisfy the miners.

The town was abandoned in 1928 when the coal vein thinned down to less than 3 feet.
